Little, until he began to tire in the last set, was always a dangerous foeman. Many times he led the attack when points were most needed, forcing Imman and Larned back to the base line by the fierceness of his smashing and the keenness of his low drives.

Inman, when he saw signs of exhaustion overtaking Little, rallied his remaining strength and steadied his strokes to such an extent that the tide of battle set in strongly for his side, and Larned ended the match with a clean-cut smash between Little and Le Roy, down the centre of the court.
